21st Century Hackers

The documentary “21st Century Hackers” was very interesting and it explained how little privacy we have in our lives. It was crazy to me that we have a whole city in South Korea that it is under complete surveillance at all times. In my opinion, I would not want that because I would need some privacy. It is not like I am breaking the law or anything but to not be able to get away with anything is just too controlling. With a society like that it is only a matter of time until people do not conform and completely destroy the government in the city. People need their personal privacy, I know that I am always being tracked and watched from every website I click on to my parents knowing my location at all times. I just hate the feeling of being exposed and you can never have anything to yourself when you are on the internet. I also was uncomfortable with the idea of the badges that track your movements and tones with others. I just feel that as long as you are doing good work the way you do it and interact should not be an issue. I would never want to work for a company that has access to everything I am doing at all times I'm there. I just feel that these advancements in technology are making us more into robots than normal humans. All in all, the documentary was very informative and brought to light many issues with these advancements in technology but also what they can do to help us with the future of the world.
